

HIGH SCHOOL CADETS TO LEARN SCIENCE OF REAL WAR TACTICS

NEW PLAN FOR ORILL PROPOSED

Real Training in Warfare With U. S. Co-operation Is Program.

The drilling methods of the cadet corps of the District public schools will be completely revolutionized this year on world war tactics and will amount to virtual military training in the schools, according to an announcement of plans for the coming year by Col. Wallace Craigie, in charge of cadets.

Will Learn Tactics.
No longer will the blue-clad figures of the high school cadets use the city streets for training grounds and go through a hackneyed drill that amounts to no more, than marching and presenting a manual of arms, says Colonel Craigie.

They will be instructed in the military warfare and tactics used on the battlefields of Europe. Bombing, trench warfare, map work and fielding will be taught theoretically just as the soldiers are instructed at Camp Benning, Ga. It is known as the "infantry plan" or the "school of infantry."

Equipment for the new training will be borrowed from the War Department and the school of cadets will be transferred from the city streets to lots and fields out in the city suburbs. This is made necessary by the fact that the new order of training requires field work and the city streets will no longer be of use.

U. S. Is Co-operating.
School authorities are making arrangements with the War Department for its fullest co-operation in the new plan and will ask for two military experts versed in modern military methods as instructors.

The new regulations will go into effect on September 19, shortly after the enrollment is completed. Enrollment in the cadet corps here is not compulsory, but high school boys are encouraged always to join.

"This year we hope to increase the cadet corps to twenty-five companies," said Col. Craigie. "Last year we had twenty-one. At Central High, where there are 3,000 students, we hope to have twelve companies alone, which in all will make a whole regiment."

"The new regulations are the same that are in use down at Camp Benning, Ga. The boys in the schools here will be taught just the same, only theoretically. It is the cadet corps that is modernized. The uniform will be the same. This year it is cheaper, costing $22 instead of the $35 of last year.

The reorganization of the cadet corps here is looked on by observers as an effort of school authorities to make the cadet system modern and is largely a result of the methods used in the world war which has itself completely revolutionized methods of warfare.

FIREMAN HELD FOR BEATING UP WIFE'S FRIEND

Must Appear in Court for Alleged Hurling of Bottle at Sailor.

After picking the wrong man as correspondent in his suit for divorce, George H. Nokes, a fireman at the Washington Terminal, has added to his matrimonial tangle by an alleged assault upon a sailor with whom he found his wife in conversation. He will be tried for assault September 23 before Judge Harrison in Police Court.

Nokes recently filed suit against Mrs. Ethel Nokes, naming a correspondent, his wife in conversation. He reported that a sailor, who was with her, was a local hoodlum. Shortly afterward Nokes, while riding his bicycle, saw Mrs. Nokes standing on a corner in southeast Washington in company with Edward W. Jozdowski, who says he is a sailor.

The sailor fell before a coffee bottle said to have been hurled by the husband. A general mixup followed, as a result of which the sailor is still in a local hospital.

The Nokes couple were married January 7, 1916, and have a four-year-old child which is in the custody of the husband's mother. Nokes accused his wife of being too much in the company with sailors at dance halls among other things.

2 ARRESTED AS VIRGINIA ROAD AUTO BANDITS

Police Believe Pair of Youths Have Been Terrorizing Motorists on Pike.

With the arrest of Richard Storti, twenty-two years old, and Gilbert A. Hurley, twenty-three, the police believe they have captured the auto bandits who have terrorized motorists on the Alexandria pike by holding them up at the point of revolvers and stealing their valuables.

During the past two months a half dozen reports have been made to the police by motorists who have been held up by the road bandits and robbed. Storti and Hurley last night were positively identified by Emmet C. Davison, of 34 U street northwest, and his two sons, Preston and Clarence.

Davison and his sons were held up early Wednesday morning on the Alexandria pike, about half a mile south of the Highway bridge. But Mr. Davison and his sons were prepared for just such an emergency. They drew automatic revolvers and threatened to kill the outlaws.

As one of the bandits held a revolver at Preston Davison's heart, the young man leveled his own automatic at the robber's head. The robbers fled.

Following the attempted hold-up, the Davisons reported their experience to the police and Inspector Clifford L. Grant, chief of detectives, detailed Detective Sergeant Scrivener, Kelly and Alligood to the case. Tracing the bandit car through its license tag, Scrivener arrested Storti and Hurley.

Two other men, who are said to have been with Storti and Hurley in the car, are being sought today. The prisoners have been turned over to Sheriff Clements, of Arlington county.

ANGELERS FIGHT FISH TRAPS IN POTOMAC RIVER

D. C. Boundary Is Issue in Dispute Over Rights of Virginia Net Owners.

The legal boundary of the District of Columbia promises to be the center of a suit between the District and Virginia over the continued practice of fishermen on the Virginia side of the Potomac trapping fish in what are by law defined District waters.

The boundary line of the District, according to Corporation Counsel Stephens, is apparently well established by previous cases, as being the high-water mark of the Potomac on the Virginia side of the river.

President Louis F. Perron, representing the Potomac Anglers' Association with nearly 3,000 members, is waging a battle to have nets on barren spawning grounds near the Virginia shore at Four Mile run and Gravelly creek removed. The nets have already been removed once, during May.

Col. Leonard Dean, of the Harbor District, has permitted nets to be erected at the same points once more.

Fishermen who have been making hauls at these points, and bringing their catch to the District for sale, claim to have been licensed to do so by the authorities of Alexandria county.

The question therefore arises: What has Virginia to do with fishing in District waters?

Stephens is communicating with Prosecuting Attorney Fred Ball, of Arlington county, in an endeavor to bring a friendly test case, that a decision may be obtained.

As representative of the anglers of the District, Perron claims the fish of the Potomac are being exterminated by net fishing in violation of the fish laws prohibiting net fishing on spawning grounds.

Fishermen are keenly interested in the outcome of the proposed suit, inasmuch as many have been making a living from their net catches. The practice has been permitted for many years and the fishermen will undoubtedly enter the controversy with legal representation.

SHOPPERS ARE ATTRACTED TO THE ROSEDERE

Beauty of Architecture of Women's Wear Store Pleases Opening Day Crowd.

The Rosedere, 1206 G street northwest, had its formal opening today at 9:30 o'clock, and many shoppers were attracted to Washington's newest specialty shop by the unusual style and beauty of architecture.

The style of architecture was the subject of comment by all those who looked there and is said to be the first of its kind ever used in a Washington shop. It is on the Adams design.

From early in the morning shoppers walked in and out of its flower-embellished walls. The interior is done in ebony and gold. The large cases lining the sides of the walls in which dresses and suits are forming a sort of wardrobe. This is one of the special features of the Adams design. A pole drawn through the upper part of the case, on which dresses are strung, is the mode of showing dress-wear to customers.

In the rear of the shop is a mezzanine millinery department that is approached by a winding marble staircase. The fixtures are of satin and gold. Perhaps the most unusual feature of architecture, and the one that most impressed visitors, was the Pompeian rotunda entrance of the store. It is a sort of octagonal-shaped vestibule with blue, gold and green designs in flowers.

The show window, which is a masterpiece of architecture, and there are odd electric lights that resemble candles hung high on the walls, the merchandise is set on a velveteen cover.

This shop is a ladies' specialty and will show ladies' wear in millinery, coats, suits, dresses and furs. Mrs. Sophia Harris, proprietor, has been receiving the compliments and congratulations of many friends on her new achievement.

All in all, The Rosedere is one of the most beautiful stores to be found in the city and a welcome addition to Washington shops.

CONGRESS PLANS HEARING TO FIX NAVAL SALARIES

Public hearings will be held as soon as Congress convenes, it was said today by the special joint committee, which, under the act of May 18, 1920, was directed to report to Congress a "just and equitable" readjustment of permanent pay and allowances for officers and enlisted men of the navy. The committee, comprising five Senators and five Congressmen, is headed by Senator Wadsworth (Republican) of New York.

The temporary bonus of 20 per cent granted naval officers in 1920 will cease with the present fiscal year, the resulting decrease in income being additional to that occasioned by the cancellation of special tax exemption, the stopping of family allowances and expected reductions which will be sustained December 31, when all temporary bonuses are cancelled. Naval officials pointed out today that the pay schedules will then be back to those established in 1908.
